

Good morning Brenda

It's been a busy few weeks here at IPAA. On 3 November our half-day conference on Public Sector Data Integration was held in partnership with the Australian Bureau of Statistics. Last month, we were pleased to host Martin Bowles PSM for his valedictory address and Rosemary Huxtable PSM to discuss the Shared Services agenda.

Coming up this month, we celebrate the Prime Minister's Awards for Excellence in Public Sector Management at a dinner function on 14 November, followed by IPAA's National Conference on 15 November which is now fully subscribed. If you missed out on a ticket to the conference, key insights from the event will be filmed and made available on our website.

Thank you for your ongoing support, I hope to see you at an event soon.

INITIATIVES AND RESOURCES

IPAA in Brief: Public Trust

An overview of trust in the public sector

Trust relationships are often clustered into two broad categories – interpersonal trust and public trust. Public trust is generated when citizens appraise public institutions and/or the government and individual political leaders as promise-keeping, efficient, fair, and honest.
